Sapulpa, Oklahoma, known throughout the country as "The Oil City of the Southwest," is located in the northeasterly part of the state, 281 miles south of Kansas City and 102 miles northeast of Oklahoma City, on the Frisco railroad. It is the county seat of Creek County, one of the wealthiest in the entire state.

In 1900 Sapulpa had a population of 1,400. December, 1913, the population was 13,787.

No city is better favored with a more healthful and invigorating climate than Sapulpa, and no city has a better class of citizens. The churches, schools, residences and business houses are of a high standard.

Sapulpa is the division point of the Frisco railway, and that system branches here three ways, east, south and west. The superintendent of the southwestern division has his offices here, and the round house, shops, yards, etc., are the largest west of Springfield, Missouri. The Frisco pay roll alone in Sapulpa is nearly $150,000 monthly.

The Sapulpa Interurban railway operates twelve miles of line throughout the city and does a freight and passenger business to Kiefer, the center of the famous Glenn Oil Pool, five miles south.

The Sapulpa city school system is one of the finest in the state. There are four large brick buildings and two frame structures. The schools are modern in equipment and method of instruction. Forty teachers are employed in the instruction department, and special, high salaried teachers are employed for the music, commercial work, manual training and domestic arts. The enrollment for the third month of the 1913 term was 1,671 as compared with 1,252 for the same month in the 1912 term.

The Euchee Indian Mission is also located here. This school is maintained by the government. Five very beautiful buildings are erected in the center of a forty acre campus.

Sapulpa also has a very modern and up to date business college, with a large enrollment of students.

The bank deposits for October, 1913, were $1,158,100.09 as compared with $769,369.89 for the same month, 1912, showing a gain of $488,730.20.

The post office receipts show an increase for the month of December, 1913, over December, 1912, of 80 per cent. The city delivery is excellent and four rural routes are maintained.

Sapulpa's water supply is second to none in the state. The reservoir covers 150 acres and there is constantly on hand a supply of two billion gallons of the finest of water. The city fire department is modern.

The business of the Frisco railroad in Sapulpa for the month of January, 1913, was $58,962.60, as compared with $48,176.85 in January, 1912. The month of August, 1913, was $128,129.77, as compared with $47,791.09 for the same month, 1912.

Sapulpa offers gas at 3 cents for manufacturing purposes and has several large and prosperous concerns. At the present there are two large glass plants in operation and two others nearly completed. With the two additional ones in operation there will be more than 700 high salaried workmen employed in the glass industry alone in the city. There are other manufacturing industries which add largely to the dinner bucket brigade, among which is one of the largest oil refineries in the southwest, a mattress factory, two candy factories, cigar factory, two large brick plants, three cotton gins, the largest compress in the state, a bottling factory, machine shops, oil well supply shops, ice plant, and other smaller concerns.

Sapulpa is the center of the great Glenn Oil Pool and several thousand oil wells surround the city. This is the distributing point to the fields and large shipments of supplies are constantly being hauled to the fields.

Natural gas for domestic use only 25c per thousand.

All fraternal orders and clubs are represented, and the Frisco maintains a splendid Y. M. C. A., housed in a three story building.

Two daily and three weekly newspapers and a modern job printing office, all equipped with the most up to date machinery, are operated.

Sapulpa, with its pretty homes, unusual educational and social facilities, its splendid churches, pure water, fine climate, make it a splendid residence city.

Sapulpa invites you to join with us, and be one of the boosters in the best and fastest growing city, in the best and fastest growing state in the Union.

For any information regarding Sapulpa and its advantages, address either the Secy. Commercial Club or Secy. Retail Merchants Association.
